Construction Begins for Powell Bubble

By Frederick Durst

Powell, Ohio - The citizens of Powell have long been waiting for relief from the persistent pillaging and violence that has been plaguing the cul de sacs of the town for decades. After attempts to merely redistrict the unhappy residents to Lewis Center were foiled by several social activist groups of angry facebook moms, The Powell Organization for Safety and Health (POSH) emerged early this morning with an alternative solution. A large, dome-like structure was proposed to cover the entire surface area of Powell, which will help protect against the harms of outside world perspectives. The blueprint only plans to exclude a small number of select locations, namely the Powell Chipotle per request of the Center For Disease Control.

"We have been working closely with Liberty's own engineering classes to create a manner for installing the dome," said the project manager Dave Rathje. Progress has reportedly experienced several setbacks due to SolidWorks crashing. The most popular idea so far is to use a series of helicopters and suction cups to drop the bubble into place. "That's how they did it in the Simpsons. It just works," remarked one of Rathje's pupils.

The project is reported to cost a staggering 3 billion dollars in construction fees. "To give you perspective, that's nearly 300 billion V-Bucks," Rathje stated. "It is certainly one of our more ambitious projects, but I believe it is vital to the safety of our people." Construction is rumored to finish during the Summer of 2019.

Rathje (front) reassures residents that a new Chic-Fil-A will be constructed within the boundaries of Powell.

School Takes Precautionary Measures

By Frederick Durst

LIBERTY, Olentangy-- With the recent drug busts of one of Liberty's most dangerous crime syndicates, the bathroom Juuling brotherhood, Liberty's administration has been using several preventative measures to reduce the the influence of illegal substances. One tactic included coining the slogan "Juuls are against the Ruuls" which single-handedly decreased e-cigarette shares by nearly 30 percent. However, this was not enough, and an executive mandate was put forth to shut down the engineering and health hallway bathrooms, forcing the brotherhood into an uncomfortable situation. The administration was pleased with the results. "We figured it worked so well the first time, why not keep doing it?" said the late Principal Warfield. This has led to the decommissioning of several other areas of the school. Flash flood concerns have prompted a complete removal of the history hallway, causing classes to be relocated to the Sophomore parking lot. Concerns have also been expressed regarding theater students potentially drowning because of the leaky ceiling in the auditorium, forcing it to be shut down as well. Due to choking hazards and rampant childhood obesity, the cafeteria has also been closed.

The district remains optimistic that after removing the gymnasium and replacing it with a recreational padded cell, students will be liberated of almost all possible dangers and negative influence. It is projected that by 2025, all Olentangy students will be uploaded to the cloud, where they will continue their academic careers in a simulation.

Deputy Peterson Breaks School Shot Put Record

By Frederick Durst

LIBERTY, Olentangy -- Liberty's track and field records had seen very little change in the past several decades. 1988 graduate Wile E. Coyote was the dominant record holder in almost every category, until last Tuesday night. In an incredible display of athleticism, Deputy Peterson managed to lob the ball into orbit, even shattering the surrounding Powell bubble. Liberty High School representatives attending the NASA sponsored space camp are currently debating whether it should be certified as Earth's second moon. If it passes an intense screening process (a twitter poll), it will be certified and consequently named "Moony McMoonface."

Deputy Peterson's throwing ability has been no secret to the community. He has gained notoriety by launching T-Shirts into the crowd between periods at Blue Jackets games. He does this with incredible speed and accuracy. "I guess it all started with the Liberty football games," remarked Peterson as he warmed up his rotator cuff. Peterson is beloved for his dutiful service ridding the football games of smuggled contraband. Once discovering a banned substance, Peterson is forced to follow strict protocol, where he picks up the student and simply throws them out of the stadium. It is often without warning, leaving subjects little time to see the term "Hand of Justice" tattooed on Peterson's throwing arm.

Peterson has received several sponsorship offers as a result of his accomplishments, including becoming the new face for Popeye Spinach. It has also been leaked that he may feature as a character in the upcoming Super Smash Brothers video game, however this remains unconfirmed.
